Nov 26, 2020 ."We have to have aid to keep our schools from closing," says family in search of $400,000 to keep their children in the same school — even though their own house is crumbling. TROY, N.Y. — Stephanie and Joseph Haudrich have a dream for their children: a suburban school house in a safe neighborhood where their two children can play sports and study history and where Stephanie can wait tables for extra money. And they thought, finally, that it could all be theirs. The couple closed on a house in Troy, N.Y., this spring for $275,000. They knew they would have to fix it up, but they hired an appraiser and got a firm price: $300,000. "When we got the appraisal, we wanted to cry," Stephanie says. "We worked so hard and we'd scrimped and saved and didn't spend a nickel on ourselves. We thought we were going to get a miracle." But suddenly, just a few weeks before closing on the house, the appraisal was put on hold. The value of the home was going down. Now, in a last-ditch effort to save their family, the couple is asking the city of Troy to give them a bailout loan. They are applying for $400,000 in emergency financial assistance from the city, money they don't f678ea9f9e
